My Lady's Monchoir. From my lady's mouchoir Wafted, as she walks afar Neath the spreading apple trees. Comes a perfume faint and rare On the lightly stirring breeze— Comes an odor, undefined. Long forgot and out of mind, Mingling with the balmy air; Comes a perfume as a song, Wak'ning memories that throng Secret chambers of my heart, Set for sacred things apart.

O'er an ancient, crumbling wall Clustered crimson roses fall, Where the winding sunflecked road Widens near the rustic gate Leading to a dear abode. There a maid with childish face, Sad and shy, yet full of grace, Stands where she was wont t In the happy bygone days. With the starlight in her gaze, With the sanlight in her hair— Once again she's waiting there.

That faint perfume doth recall As my lady walks alone. All unconscious, fancy free— Aye, methinks she has outgrown All the childish love that beamed From those gentle eyes, and seemed Cherished then for none but me. Truly, she remembers not Those dear days, that sacred spot, Though recalled to me, they are By my lady's mouchoir.

LOOKING FOR THE CAUSE.

The fact that the typhoid fever in Takoma Park has been almost entirely confined to the Page family, gives rice to the suspicion that the well from which the family procured water for drinking and cooking purposes has become contaminated by typhoid germs.

The residence occupied by the family is situated on low ground and receives the drainage from property opposite, located on a higher elevation, where there was a case of typhoid last summer.

There are but two other cases of typhoid fever in Takoma Park, both of which are convalescent.

During the illness of her children Mrs. Page has been constantly waiting upon them and has suffered loss of salary by reason of her absence from the office.

A subscription paper was started among her fellow employes, which met with generous response, the sum of $338 being quickly realized. This will be utilized in meeting the heavy expenses incorred during the protracted period of family illness and in making as comfortable as possible the condition of the stricken mother.

Said He Was the Rightful "King of Rome" and Cooked for a Living. (European Edition N. Y. Herald.)

An old man who said that he was the law ful "King of Rome" and a son of Marie and Napoleon I died recently at Louise and Napoleon I died recently at Arezzo, in Italy, at the advanced age of eighty-five. He was sair have had a strong family likeness to the Emperor, es-pecially when he shaved his mustache. His visiting cards were inscribed with the fol-lowing words: "Napoleone, re dt Roma sacrificato."

Capelli, a monk, to whom Marie Louise was said to have intrusted him when a child, was said to have intrusted him when a child, and who superintended his education, never failed to impress his pupil with a sense of the brilliant future that awaited this alleged son of Bonaparte. As, however, these prospects failed in their realization, he was compelled to adopt the calling of a cook, a profession which he followed all his life. He showed himself so full of tact, re-serve and honesty in the exercise of his duties that his master, in dying, left him a small life annuity, the only fortune that he ever nosessed. rver possessed.

The Gaulois, however, says that it is scarcely necessary to demonstrate the ab-surdity of this legend. There was never any question of a scar on the forehead, such as the Italian cook is claimed to have carried, in the birth certificate drawn up at the birth of the King of Rome and signed by Dubois. It is certain that Bubois would have recorded this sear had it existed.

On the other hand, M. Arthur Levy the well-informed author of "Napoleon Intime," declares that the young King did not resemble his father. Bo true is this that he did not scruple to wear a mustache. Moreover bie his father. So true is this that he did not scruple to wear a mustache. Moreover he was blonde, like his mother. None of the multitudinous pamphlets di-rected against the First Napoleon ever men-tioned this alleged substitution, nor did Louis XVIII make capital of so handy a weapon, all of which proves that the present discov-ery is nothing more than a mare's nest.
